Dear 8A,

One of the best parts, for me, about being a teacher is that you never know the students you will meet at the beginning of each new school year. Many times, I pray and wait with bated breath for that first day of school. Why? You may ask. You see, for the 10 months of the school year, the students in my homeroom become a central part of my life. I talk about them to my family, friends, co-workers and, these days, to my husband...

I wake up and come to school for them, their problems become mine, I worry for them, I pray for them. I share my life with them as they share theirs with me. Each year brings with it its share of joys and blessings and lessons learnt that belong only to us.

This year too, I have once again been blessed with a group of students mismatched in every way possible... LoL. But I could not have asked for a better mismatched group than the "SAMUNIAS"... (vocabulary from "Dictionary of Strange words according to Yohart"... copyright) of grade 8A. I've loved every minute spent with you guys this first quarter. I just wanted you all to know that you brighten my day and bring me so much joy and laughter.

I can only imagine what the remaining three quarters have in store for us. Whatever it is, I'm sure it will "HURT SO GOOD"... (a Phrase from "Book of strange unquotable quotes according to Pete"... All rights reserved)

Have a great weekend

God Bless

Affectionately,

Mary A. Lartey
